A Healthy School Culture

School climate and school culture directly affect how successful the students will be. As a result, it is crucial for the school and the classroom culture to reflect, acknowledge, and celebrate diversity.

A good school has a mix of new and veteran teachers. New teachers come into a school fired up to teach and innovate. Many feel that they can make a difference. At the same time, they often have a lot to learn about classroom management and the workings of the school system. By contrast, veteran teachers provide years of experience and understanding about how to manage their classrooms and get things done in the school, but they may be wary of innovation. SSIS-Batangas' faculty is definitely a great balance when it comes to seasonality. It remains to be one of the most sought-after schools by fresh graduates, for a plethora of beautiful and impressive reasons while it is still a home to many veteran teachers who have been serving with the school for decades. One thing is for sure, despite the amount of time they have spent in teaching, they are all passionate in using different strategies and methodologies for effective and efficient teaching such as Understanding by Design (Ubd), Positive Learning Environment Through Discipline (PLED), Expected Schoolwide Learning Results (ESLR's), Differentiated Curriculum, Instruction, and Assessment (DCIA), Brain-Based Compatible Learning, and so much more.

A good school is led by a Principal with a great attitude towards teaching and learning. A school principal's job is balanced between being rewarding and challenging. It is a difficult job, and like any job, there are people who are not able to handle it. An effective principal should be open, encouraging, and innovative. He should be student-centered in his decisions. The school, SSIS-Batangas is headed by a person who — as you may already know — is quite adept at building relationships with people, is always fair and consistent, is organized and prepared, and a hardworking and dedicated visionary.

Education is ever-evolving. The people working in a school is its heart and soul. As much as the curriculum must develop with the world, the people implementing it must also be innovative and have the heart for positive changes.
